Faculty Disclosure: The Stanford University School of Medicine adheres to the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME) Essential Areas, Standards and Policies regarding industry support of continuing medical education. Disclosure of faculty and commercial relationships will be made prior to the activity.
COURSE OVERVIEW
This CME workshop seeks to fulfill the need to improve the fund of knowledge of primary care providers of children on the scientific and clinical development in the field of hematology, oncology and stem cell transplantation. This workshop will utilize lectures with case studies to engage the learners in the educational process.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES
- Recognize the signs and symptoms of vascular malformations
- Develop strategies to refer patients to specialists appropriately
- Recognize signs and symptoms that can be generic to many childhood cancers
- Develop skills to provide optimal care to pediatric patients with signs and symptoms of cancer including referral to specialists when appropriate
- Determine appropriate indications stem cell transplantation
- Recognize diseases other than cancer that are often treated with a stem cell transplant.
- Develop strategies to refer patients for the stem cell transplant
- Develop strategies to support your patients who are cancer survivors

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?
This symposium will cover topics of medical conditions related to pediatric hematology, oncology and stem cell transplantation that are often first encountered by primary care practitioners before referral to pediatric specialists. This activity is intended for pediatricians, family practice physicians, nurses and interested allied health professionals.

ACCREDITATION AND DESIGNATION OF CREDITS
The Stanford University School of Medicine is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME) to provide continuing medical education for physicians.
